Belasco—Operatic Concert.

The operatic concert given by the San Carlo Grand Opera Company at the Belasco last night proved a brilliant climax to a week of grand opera.

WILL BE SPRING VISITOR.

MRS. RICHARD L. HARGREAVES, Daughter of the Secretary of State and Mrs. Bryan, who is due in Washington soon. Mrs. Hargreaves resides in Lincoln, Neb.

notable alike for fine presentations and large audiences. The program of fifteen numbers embodied the melodic "big moments" of eleven operas, which demanded the entire force of the organization: principals, chorus, ballet and the full orchestra, directed by Giuseppe Angelini, with Maestro Ugo Barducci at a piano placed on the stage.

From the opening solo—"Cavatina," from "Cenerentola" (Rossini), sung by Natalie Cervi—to the final sextet from "Lucia," given by Vaccari, Sedelmayer, Graziani, Rossini, Antola and Cervi, each singer was tumultuously applauded, and despite the long and exacting program encores were generously responded to. In contrast to Elsa's aria, "Lohengrin," Mme. Mary Kassner sang with girlish joyousness "My Heart Is Like a Singing Bird," and Mlle. Edith Alvord shared a like ovation when, at the close of "Dost Thou Know That Fair Land?" from "Mignon," she sang a verse of "My Rosary." Mme. Edridge Vaccari's "Caro Nome" was given with such superb execution that after the "Rigoletto" number and after that "The Last Rose of Summer," sung in Italian, she was recalled again and again. Signor Sciarretti was indisposed, and his place was taken by Signor Graziani, who gave the aria from "La Tosca" with an impassioned force that elicited an encore, and the same tributes were exacted from Signor Antola, who sang the prologue from "Pagliacci." Signor Agostini, who was heard in "Che Gelida Manina," from "La Boheme," and Signor Sciarretti gave the "Coat Song" from the same opera. Signor Modesti and chorus sang the "Tosca" from "Carmen," a splendid effect, but the number being a long one, refused insistent demands for a repetition. Another laurel was captured by the Dances of the Hours from "La Gioconda," given by a ballet that made fame for itself earlier in the week. Mme. Erera, though dispirited by a cold, sang the "Celi Azzurri" aria from "Aida," and refused an encore. The orchestra was forced to repeat the barcarolle from the Tales of Hoffmann, the second overture given the first being a splendidly rhythmic interpretation of "The Barber of Seville."

She is Miss Ella Kist, who lives with Mrs. Tina Nemeyer at 411 South Benton street and had been separated from her brothers since she was eight years old. Their parents died and they were adopted by different families and lost track of each other until a few weeks ago.

SCENERY AND VIEWS CHARM THE WALKERS

Fair Weather and Inviting Trail
Draw 227 to "Hike" Beyond
Eastern Branch.

Washington wanderlusters "hit the trail" again yesterday afternoon. Considerable interest was shown in a report by a New York paper that a band of wanderlusters has been organized in Harlem, with George E. Bosson as the leader. Last Sunday this group took a hike, starting from Fort Lee ferry. The movement there originated in Washington.

Following is the "official" account of the official outing of the Washington walkers yesterday:
"No fairer weather conditions could have been wished for the hikers than those of yesterday. Jolly round Mr. Sun welcomed the crowd of 227 with his broadest smile, and John Boyle, Jr., the leader, was happy, as well as all the rest. Meeting at the north end of Pennsylvania Avenue bridge, a picturesque place in itself, the walk led across the bridge and along the avenue on the other side for about a quarter of a mile; thence via an unnamed road to the right, and by road and trail to Overlook Inn, near the Randall Heights Schoolhouse.

Beautiful View of City.

"Some of us had been told of the beautiful view of the city from this point, but it was better to experience it. As we again looked over and upon our city we were glad to be counted among its residents, and, best of all, to appreciate some of the magnificent scenery and views adjacent.
"For the most part the trail led through the woods, crossing a few roads and small streams, and over the hills intervening between Randall Heights and Benning, with two or three fences thrown in for good measure. The first stop was at the brow of one of these hills, overlooking a section of Branch road. Running down this hill (for this we had to do) we came out on Branch road, then again to Pennsylvania Avenue, following this for several hundred yards, then dropping off into the woods again and along by a shady brook.

"At the crossing of the stream a few of the venturesome males, urged on by the more daring, made the awful (?) leap across the yawning chasm to the mossy bank beyond.

Charming Arrangement of Views.

"The homeward journey took us down Ridge road, bordered on one side by beautiful cedar trees and on the other by a low hedge of shrubs and vines. A charming arrangement of views was in evidence. To the left the Eastern branch of the Potomac, like a watch of silver amid the blue sky and the gold and russet effects of the forest, with the dark background of the evergreen again in view and a section of looming up in the dim distance; to the front the crowd, stretched out nearly as far as the eye could reach, Old Glory floating in the breeze at the head of the procession. The sound of the bugle call at intervals completed the charm to the eye and ear.

Rev. Charles W. Kelley Dies.

Rev. Charles W. Kelley, brother of the late O. T. Kelley, founder of the Patrons of Husbandry, or, as the members of the organization are more popularly known, "the Grangers," died at his sister's residence in Ipswich, Mass., Friday. The interment will take place at Ipswich today. The deceased lived for a long while with his brother at 2014 Kalorama road and had a wide circle of friends and acquaintances in Washington.
